The Other Side of The Mokena Cemetery Story

We believe as American citizens that it was a cowardly and un-American act to doubt the sincerity of our honest endeavor to remember our ancestors of the Revolutionary War by an un-warranted attack. The person or persons responsible for this attack did not sign their name, unwittingly revealing that he or they were ashamed of it and unwilling to disclose their identity.

This un-American act is really not worthy of an answer, but nevertheless we merely wish to state that there was nothing but veneration in our hearts and the desire to make this old cemetery look at least respectable. When we undertook the great task of converting this almost hopeless tangle of rubbish, bushes and weeds of forgetfulness, into a fitting resting place for these noble ancestors of a bygone age, who deserve to be honored and at least remembered by all of us.

While raking this matted spot free from the weeds of forgetfulness, it appears that we also disturbed a hornet's nest. It is to be remembered that when anything of consequence worthwhile is done there are always a few scoffers. We have been indirectly and wrongly accused of wilfully destroying this historic spot. But it cannot be said that we have forgotten it.

Do we want to teach our children that the proper way to respect and honor our deserving dead is to forget them? Those who have been cleaning this resting place are: The Mokena Village Board, The Mokena Garden Club, who once in a while have been cutting the weeds, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Semmler who have been taking care of flags and plants for Decoration Day. If anyone else with loving hands has been cleaning and straightening up this last resting place, we haven't seen it in at least twenty-five years.

Any other cemetery that has not been forgotten, was beautified with trees, lawns and bushes and was not considered demolished. We should not let petty jealousies stand in the way of this worthy task and after it is completed we don't think the world will think Mokena a queer place. A state official has approved of this work and did not look horrified to us. Nothing looks more ignorant to us than a forgotten grave overgrown with weeds.

Judging from the appearance of these graves before, anyone would think we were from twenty-five to fifty years behind the times. Help in preserving these "God's Acres" was refused by the government, presumably because of no appropriations.

It can be proved that the Mokena Garden Club has not moved one single marker from its foundation, but has merely gathered up the stones that were wilfully broken and strewn about.

Anyone wishing to show their patriotism, love and respect, can do so by co-operating with the Mokena Garden Club who will gladly welcome them.

MRS. ANTON BENSON, President Mokena Garden Club.

Rep. Editors Lunch With Herbert Hoover

About 200 Republican editors of northern and central Illinois attended a luncheon at which ex-president Herbert Hoover was the honored guest last Saturday noon at the La-Grange Country Club.

Mr. Hoover gave a very fine extemporaneous address in which he covered a wide range of subjects some of the most outstanding being his admonition that America preserve her democratic form of government for if America ever should go the way of some of the civilizations of Europe, civilization itself will be set back a thousand years. Mr. Hoover also gave a very fine word picture of his trips abroad and of the reasons why dictators spring into power. The editors were privileged to write various questions on cards which were then given to Mr. Hoover for answers.

Following the luncheon and address Mr. Hoover autographed cards and song sheets.

Reports Mokena Property Destruction To Sheriff's Office

For many years the old Stellwagen buildings on Front street in Mokena have been a bone of contention. They have been vacant for a long time and efforts have been made by the village board to have these buildings torn down on the ground that they were fire hazards. But all this was no avail. The owners did repair the buildings to some extent a few years ago but the structures remained vacant. The doors and windows were boarded up and no one molested the premises until recently when parties unknown under the cover of night began to demolish the buildings. The windows, doors, plastering, wall paper, etc was ripped out and removed from the premises. This kept on until the two houses looked as tho a cyclone had hit them.

The buildings being considered a dangerous fire hazard, the Mokena Civic Association appointed a committee to see the Stellwagen family residing near Harvey and acquaint them with the situation. Edward Stellwagen then wrote to his sister Emma in Chicago about the situation and she came to Mokena the forepart of this week. When she saw what had happened to her property she made a report of vandalism to Sheriff James O'Neill of Will County. She reported that in addition to the destruction of the buildings various articles of furniture stored in the buildings have been stolen.

Miss Stellwagen says she is going to stay in the wrecked buildings and is armed with a revolver and who ever trespasses on this property at night or any other time will stand a chance of stopping a bullet.

Mokena Farmer Granted Patent

Glen C. Peterson, Mokena farmer, has been granted a patent for an improved straw binder.

The device was invented by Peterson two years ago and is designed for installation on combine harvesters. It makes possible the saving of straw formerly left behind combines after their tours of the harvest field.

Bundling and tying the straw, the device drops the bundles on the field to be collected after the combine has passed. It supersedes the old method of raking up the straw after it had been scattered over the field by the combine.

The Conquering Spirit

The true American Spirit that will not be downed is what led us into those wars from which we came forth victorious. Because everything has a price, and victory perhaps the greatest of all, we lost thousands of men who fought our cause. It is to them that we go on Memorial Day bearing flowers as tributes. In honor of those men who have preserved our United States.

12th Judicial Circuit Record Strongly G.O.P.

The 12th judicial circuit, where eleven candidates are striving for three judgeships to be filled in the election June 5, never elected a Democrat previous to the present term.

Only one independent, in fact, broke the virtually solid Republican front the 12th circuit had always shown from the time of the last redistricting in 1897 until the Roosevelt landslide swept the three Democratic incumbents into office in 1933.

These facts, developed in a survey brought cheer to those who are working for the defeat in next month's election of Judge Edwin C. (Slot Machine) Wilson of Joliet and his two running mates on the regular Democratic ticket.

Foes of the Judge, whose 1936 injunction protected slot machines in Will county from official raids for a year, point to the recent trend back to the G. O. P. column of the three counties in the 12th circuit—Will, Iroquois and Kankakee—as indication that the Democratic slate will be beaten this year.

"Looks like quite a fiesta," the Senator observed, halting beside Breck.

The party moved down and was at once engulfed by the fiesta. Eating had already begun, with Temple himself, red-faced, beaming behind his gray beard, master of ceremonies at the barbecue pit. He wielded a long knife over quarters of beef, raked potatoes from the coals, poured coffee from five-gallon pots, and all the while kept up a running banter with those who passed around him.

"Howdy, ranger folks!" he called, brandishing his knife, "grub's up; set in!"

Sutherland waved to him. Irene nodded, though her eyes were sweeping over the throng. Breck, too, scanned the faces, looking for Louise. Presently he saw her sitting on a log near her cabin, a cowboy on either side and two standing in front. All were thoroughly enjoying themselves and the sight brought a sudden stab of jealousy. But Breck's duty was with the Sutherlands. He felt responsible for them, and so while Cook rode off with the horses, he found places where they might sit, then, with the Senator, began to bring food.

Irene shrieked at the slabs of meat he brought. "My dear, a whole cow! Please give me just the leg."

As men passed with steaks in their hands, or gnawing a roasted rib, she stared in amazement. "I never saw anything like it!"

Friendships started easily. In time the Senator had launched an argument with a storekeeper from Lone Tree, and Mrs. Sutherland and Irene had found another party of tourists. Immediately Breck took advantage of that to go on a quest of his own. But in crossing the grounds he came upon J. G. Jackson and some of the cowboys he had not seen since the fight on Black Mountain. And then by the time he could get away, the riding had started.

A gun-shot drew men swarming to the corral fence. Inside, horses were being roped and saddled. He saw Louise come from her cabin and vanish through the gate.

He stood watching from a distance, his eyes running over lines of men upon the fence and others lounging back in the trees, and it came to him that there was not a Tillson among them. Nor had Sierra appeared yet. Abruptly he turned and walked back to the barbecue pit where he had last seen Cook.

The ranger was still there, having a sociable bite with Temple. Breck motioned to him. Cook approached. "What is it, young fellow?"

"What about Slim?"

"Ought to be here any minute. He's late, but might have been held in town for some reason."

Breck nodded. "And the Tillsons?"

Cook scowled. "That's different. I was asking Tom if he'd seen 'em. They haven't been around, and I can't figure it out."

"You don't think it looks bad for Sierra?"

"No, not that. They're up to some other kind of a deal."

"Yes, and it's going to be from the bottom of the stack!" Breck asserted. "Anything you want me to do?"

"Just go on with the show, young fellow."

But Breck lost interest in the show as the afternoon passed and Sierra did not appear. Cook was right; Slim could take care of himself, and they could do no better than wait; yet inaction became unbearable.

Breck watched the rodeo with sightless eyes, knowing vaguely that wild horses were being ridden and men thrown, but his thoughts could not be centered there.

At dusk he sought Cook again, having worked himself into a fine turbulence.

The ranger checked him with a look. "Unstring yourself," he said. "No need to worry about Sierra, and you're missing a lot of fun around here. God knows you may need it. Have you seen Lou?"

He had not.

Cook grinned. "There's going to be a dance, you know."

Relieved by the old ranger's unperturbed manner, Breck went at once in search of Louise. Temple said she was in her cabin, fixing up. Breck knocked on the door.

"Just a minute," she called out; then womanlike took half an hour.

When she appeared, she had changed into a dress of something pink, and, as once before, he felt he was gazing at a new girl, almost a stranger.

"Do you see a ghost?" she teased.

"No; an angel."

"Now, now!"

Breck smiled and took her hand.

"You're real enough. I've come to fill my dance card. Every other number, Louise."

"What?"

"I mean it; I'm that selfish. Will you save them?"

She hesitated. "You don't want every other dance with me. That wouldn't be fair—to your guest."

"I think my guest understands," Louise shook her head. "No; I can't promise you."

"Then the first and third," he demanded. "We can see about the rest later."

A fire of logs in a clearing beyond the cabins lighted the whole camp, bringing fences, tree trunks, people into red relief against the blackness outside. Three cowboys with a saxophone, a fiddle, and guitar marched toward the fire and sat on stumps nearby. Men and girls surged onto a square of hard-packed ground and, with partners chosen, waited for the music to begin.

Breck turned, laughing, as he drew Louise to him. At the same moment he saw Irene watching from a distance. A cowboy stood at her side. She held back a minute, looking across, then stiffly took his arm.

The music was all but lost in the

"That was cheap, Irene! Cheapens me and makes you low in the eyes of everyone here! Not a girl out there would do it. Not like that!"

Irene faced him defiantly. "Oh good Lord! Since when have you turned Puritan? Of course you have never kissed at a dance before!"

"These people are different," Breck flared. "They take things in a different way. And you knew it."

"Well?"

Breck stared at her. "We know each other pretty well, Irene. But I never thought you would try to make me a fool among my friends."

"No, Gordon, someone else has done that." Her hand reached toward him.

He avoided it. "So you're saving me?"

Irene shrugged. "Thanks," Breck finished. "You might have taken a better time and place."

"Run along!" Irene retorted, with head up, lips in a sarcastic smile.

By the time he could get away the riding had started.

shuffling and babble of voices. Yet the guitar strummed out its rhythm, and there was plenty of space about the blazing logs. Breck found himself moving with Louise as if in some firelit promenade.

They danced in silence. Tonight there was that sweet, yielding quality about Louise which made conversation needless. She seemed content held close in his arms as they slowly circled. Breck felt a quick, new thrill sweeping his thoughts clear of all troubles.

The music stopped. Louise drew away. Breck came back to realities at the sound of his own voice. "That was an awfully short dance."

She smiled up in complete understanding. "Wasn't it, though?"

The second began at once and a jovial-faced cowhand from Jackson's outfit rushed up to claim her.

"Remember," Breck called in parting, "we're next again."

He strode away to where he had last seen Irene, wondering how she would meet him, being prepared for petulance, or disdain, or even flat cutting.

Yet she turned from her first partner with a gay laugh, sent the boy off grinning and held out her two hands.

"Gordon; isn't this wild! Don't you adore it? I'm having simply a grand time!" She slipped into his arms readily. "Don't let's miss anything!"

Surprised, though concealing it, Breck tried to enter her talkative mood. How different from the last dance where nothing need be said. He made conversation to continue Irene's frivolous banter.

She closed her eyes dreamily and when they passed Louise the first time was apparently unaware of it. Then other couples swept about them and for several minutes they were among strangers.

Irene clung close to him. Once she looked into his face, half explaining, "The ground is getting rough."

When Louise again approached from beyond the fire, Breck unconsciously moved from Irene's grasp.

She glanced up. "Is the dance ended, Gordon?" She was tall, and now, tilting her head, brought her lips almost to his.

"No," he answered, "but . . ."

Swiftly she silenced him with a kiss, long, warm, full upon his mouth.

He threw his head back, halting. Cowhands grinned. Louise, passing near his shoulder, stared once and turned away.

He pushed out to the throng's edge, and releasing Irene, save for his hand clenched about one wrist, he whirled her savagely into the shadows of the pines. Fury choked him. Words burst uncontrolled.

By the time he could get away the riding had started.

"My cowboy friend has this next, and I know she's waiting for you." The dance had ended. Breck returned into the light.

Louise was standing away from the crowd. He wanted to rush to her, take her in his arms; but she met him with level, unsmiling eyes.

"I think," she said, "this is our dance. I'd rather sit it out."

"Sit?" Breck demanded. "You ask me to sit still?"

They walked in silence back to a shadowed path.

Suddenly he began. "You saw that, of course. I'm sorry. It didn't mean a thing."

"Oh, didn't it?" She stopped, her arm remaining impassively in his grasp.

"No!"

She gave a strained little laugh. "A girl kisses a man, and it doesn't mean a thing! How strange; I always thought it did." She turned from him; the laughter died from her voice and her next words were tense with controlled feeling.

"I'm a girl, with a girl's view. Maybe we are silly sometimes, but no girl would kiss you like that without the right—some previous right, I suppose. Now, hadn't you better go back to her?"

"Louise," Breck pleaded, "you must understand me. I have known her a long time; once we were engaged. But it was not love and we found it out. You surely realize what happened tonight! Irene did that for a purpose . . . in front of you."

He looked at her, smiling a little. "I'm a man and not supposed to know about women's technique; but still I'm not blind."

She would not face him. "Louise!" he begged, throwing one arm about her waist.

"Stop right there, Ranger! I've been waiting for that!"

The voice came from behind him, somewhere in the dark. Breck whirled, one hand falling to his gun. "Hold it! Keep 'em up!" A mounted man burst from the trees. Breck looked up at Art Tillson towering above him, and then into the round black bore of a pistol.

The cowboy sat in his saddle unsteadily, his left hand gripping the horn; hatless, without a coat, and his horse was lathered from hard running.

"Louise," he said thickly, "you get back!"

Breck pushed her into the shadows. Then he faced young Tillson. "Art," he snapped, "you're drunk. Put away that gun and get out of here!"

"Wha-a-a-t?" Art leered in mock wonder, leaning far over until his face came close to Breck's. "You tellin' me to get out? So's you can go back to the dance? Nice, all right. You with two women—an' me with none. I'm nothin' but a mountain fool—that it?"

Suddenly his mood changed. His face turned to that of a fiend, set with a cold, bloodless look. Breck heard the gun's hammer click; then a gasp of terror from behind him.

"I'm going to kill you!" The words drifted from clenched teeth. The gun moved.

CHAPTER XXII

If Breck had not seen the flash, he would have thought the report came from Tillson's pistol. But the flare was from one side. Then he saw Art grip his saddle horn with both hands and slump forward.

"Grab that horse!"

Breck leaped, obeying the voice. He drew the animal down. Art was falling. Then it was Sierra Slim's long arms that reached up, supporting him before he struck the ground.

"Mighty close, pardner," the slow voice drawled. "You shouldn't a come out like this."

"Slim! Where . . . ?"

"Can't say now. Here, help me pack him."

Louise ran from the shadows. "Take him to Dad's cabin," she cried. "Quick!"

With Art lying unconscious between them, Breck and Sierra turned into the back trail. The gunshot had either gone unheard or was accepted without interest by the dance crowd, for no one had moved from the clearing. But before the party reached Temple's cabin, Cook stepped from a fringe of trees.

"What's up?" he began, then his eyes fell upon the form they carried, and he strode ahead with no further question. As soon as they had Tillson on a bunk, he closed the door, saying, "No need to have anyone find out if we can help it."

His thick brown fingers went with unexpected skill over the boy's body, stripping off his shirt, exposing a gash through his right arm and across his chest. Abruptly he turned to Louise. "Go get Joe Scott. He's a horse doctor, but it's all the same."

The girl ran out. Breck poured a basin of water and gave it to Cook. Behind him, Sierra rolled a cigarette and looked on unperturbed.

"I been following Art since afternoon," he offered. "Found him bustin' around up on the ridge, ridin' like he was loco. He'd come down here, sit lookin' on for awhile, then beat that poor critter of his back up the slope. Drunk, sure. Then about dark I saw him start spottin' you, pardner. Maybe you've got an idea what bit him."

Toy Lending Libraries Are Thriving In Many Cities Throughout Country

It pays to borrow. That's what the thousands of children think who've been taking advantage of the toy lending libraries now thriving in 50 cities, reveals a New York correspondent in the Boston Globe.

A downtown Manhattan settlement house was the first distribution point of reconditioned toys, collected soon after a Brooklyn probation officer conceived the idea of lending toys to children who had few playthings at home. She had found that youngsters in her precinct were being arrested for stealing toys, and launched the toy-lending scheme to help stop the crime wave.

The New York office, supported by personal contributions, takes no money from its units, but simply gives advice on organization, and occasionally ships some of its toys back and forth for other branches to use.

Usually, toy libraries are located in city settlement houses or in schools. Public School 28, in Brooklyn, for example, ties up the toy-lending scheme with its educational program. Toys are made in some manual training classes, repaired and reconditioned in others.

Students who have the best marks are rewarded by being made librarians to supervise the checking out of toys.

Most of the 2,000 students in this school come from underprivileged families, with one toy the most they have at home. They are permitted to borrow one toy at a time, and keep it a week. Their credit is unlimited, providing they return the toy in good condition.

A Chicago toy library, established by the park district in co-operation with the WPA, prefers to have parents sign the borrowing cards. This toy has an elaborate system of disinfecting the toys after each use.

PAUL THINKS IN WORLD TERMS

LESSON TEXT—Romans 1:1-17.
GOLDEN TEXT—For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ: for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth.—Romans 1:16.

"I see chaos . . . only one thing will stop this coming chaos . . . a sweeping spiritual revival. Unless we have such a reawakening of religious forces we shall have a depression within the next 10 years that will make the last one look like a Christmas eve program." So wrote a prominent business advisor recently, as quoted in the Advisory Commentary. His view is shared by others not only in business but in governmental circles. Religious leaders, some of whom until recently were presenting glowing pictures of the beautiful fellowship of the peoples of the earth in a modernistic faith which is far from the gospel, are now either silent or prophets of despair. Faithful witnesses for God have long seen the approach of this day, and like prophets of old have warned the people to turn to God. God still lives. The good news of the gospel has lost none of its redeeming power. The Light of the World is ready to shine in the darkness. Now is the time to preach.

I. The Gospel (vv. 1-6).

Paul knew himself as the bond-slave of Jesus Christ, recognizing that he had been set apart by God for the exalted purpose of preaching the gospel. The word itself means "good news," that is, any good news. But because there is but one bit of good news in the world entitled to a place of supremacy, it has come to mean the good news of the grace of God in Christ Jesus.

Note the three points made by Paul. First, it is "the gospel of God," good news from God. "Humanly speaking, from every reasonable standpoint, God can have only one message for fallen, rebellious men—a message of judgment and death. If there is to be good news from God, then God Himself must undertake to change the relationship between man and Himself so that He will be able to bestow His richest blessings upon men. This is the good news, that God is undertaking to save men from the judgment and doom that man deserves" (Wilbur M. Smith).

Then observe that this salvation was prophesied beforehand (v. 2). This gospel we have is not something suddenly prepared to meet an emergency. It was prepared before the foundation of the world (Eph. 1:4; Rev. 13:8). And in verse 3 we read that the good news is "concerning his Son." He is the only Savior and unless it is concerning Him that we are to speak, the news is not good news.

II. The Gospel for the Whole World (vv. 7-15).

Religious cults flourish only where conditions prosper them. "Buddhism, we are told, succeeds best in warm climates. Mohammedanism flourishes among people of low culture. The gospel of Christ breaks through all barriers of geography, climate and race, and has proved itself to be equally adapted to men of 'all nations'" (LeRoy M. Lowell).

Paul was called to preach to Greek and barbarian, to Jew and Gentile, to the wise and the unwise, to every living soul. What is more, he regarded himself as a debtor to them, and that is the spirit that brings forth a sacrificial determination to make Christ known to the ends of the earth. Let us recognize that we too are in debt to the whole world because we have the gospel that men need. Then in Christ's name let us as honorable men and women pay our debt. Perhaps some who would not wait overnight to pay the grocer for what he has delivered, have never felt the slightest compunction about standing in debt to all men for the preaching of the gospel.

III. The Gospel for the World's Salvation (vv. 16, 17).

Paul was not ashamed to take the gospel into the very heart of that ancient world, the magnificent city of Rome. Had he come with some new philosophy of life which had no power to transform men, he might well have been ashamed, but he knew that what he had would meet the deepest needs of humanity for deliverance from sin and sorrow and eternal death. He knew that the need of the "up and out" was the same as that of the "down and out"—namely, the redeeming grace of God—the gospel which is "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth" (v. 16).

Why should we who follow Christ be so timid when Paul could be so bold? Certainly we should not speak to men about this good news in an apologetic, "hope-you-won't-mind" attitude. Men need Christ. We know Christ will meet their every need. Let us not be ashamed to tell them about Him in the home, in the church, in the office, on the street, in America, in China, in Africa, yes, even to the very ends of the earth.

Non-Partisan Campaign Com. Is Organized

Formation of the Citizen's non-partisan Judicial Campaign Committee, for the re-election of sitting Republican and Democratic judges and associated coalition candidates whose names appear in the Democratic column, was perfected Wednesday, May 24 at a meeting in the Palmer House in Chicago.

Henry F. Tenney, noted lawyer and former president of the Village of Winnetka, is chairman of the group, and Archibald Cattell, lawyer and educator, is secretary. More than 150 outstanding civic, professional, business, labor and industrial leaders of Chicago and Cook county, are members. Headquarters are at 120 S. LaSalle Street.

"We have organized," Mr. Tenney said following the meeting, which was addressed by several of the judicial candidates, "to preserve the tradition of nonpartisanship which has been invoked for more than fifty years by the people of Cook county to keep the courts free of political domination. We are for coalition because all sitting Republican and Democratic judges, entitled to re-election on their records, have been nominated on the coalition ticket, their names appearing in the Democratic column. We are supporting this ticket because the sitting judges are actually running as nonpartisans, and because their records entitle them to re-election. They have made Cook county's Courts a model of efficiency. Every man on the Democratic ticket has a public record by which he may be judged, and every man with one exception has had judicial training."

plan to use the book as a valuable reference and for circulation among the students particularly interested in chemistry.

In 1935, when the American Chemical Industries celebrated the three-hundredth anniversary of the birth of the chemical industry in the United States, Mr. Morrison was charged with writing a review of the great contributions of this industry to civilization. The book was completed in 1937, and shows the contributions of this science to everyday living.

Mr. Morrison is credited with the discovery of a method of separating oxygen and nitrogen in a magnetic field. He is an honorary past president, The American Institute, chair, of the Committee on Astronomy and Planetarium of the American Museum of Natural History and president of the New York Academy of Sciences. He was chairman of the Chemical Advisory Committee of the U. S. Department of Commerce from 1925 to 1932 and has attended the League of Nations both as an unofficial observer and as a spokesman.

After dinner everyone attended the Tower Theater and saw "The Oklahoma Kidd", "Love Affair", a Donald Duck comedy and some scientific pictures.

The funds for this banquet and Theater party were taken from the proceeds of the play, "Johnny Grows Up", and the from the bunco and card party given by the high school.

Members on the transportation committee were Norman Yunker, Hazel Uthe, Mildred Doctor and Eugene Uthe. Those on the theater committee were: Margaret Bergin, Norman Yunker and Arthur Uthe.

WE MUST CONSERVE By Norman Creveling

"We must conserve our natural resources", said Theodore Roosevelt. When he made this statement little did he realize that it was to start the greatest drive for conservation this country has ever known. Let us see what is now being done.

Several years ago the United States led the world in point of value of forest products. Today it is surpassed by four other countries, but it is steadily regaining its lost leadership. How? By conservation. The government is paying thousands of dollars annually to preserve our present forests and replace our burned or otherwise ruined forests. Not only does the forest pay for itself in timber products, but it is a great help in a time of floods, of landslides. A great naturalist once said, "Invest in a tree, you cannot lose."

Our wild game although once being killed off at an alarming rate of speed is once more able to exist in comparative safety, thanks to the American drive for conservation. The government is continually opening new conservatories, and wild game refuges, and limiting the hunting season to certain parts of each year, varying with the amount of game and condition of the game.

These are two or three great problems of conservation. The third is soil conservation. Each year the government spends vast sums on research laboratories. In these laboratories work is done by high paid workers whose sole job it is to find new ways to preserve our soil. The government then distributes booklets and papers among the farmers and forest workers about the new and improved methods of conserving our soil.

The government spends millions of dollars for dams and flood walls to protect our soil from erosion and being carried off by the high waters.

Forests are even being planted in suitable places to act as dams. Our other natural resources are comparatively safe. The water will always be plentiful and the United States Government and many state governments are doing all in their power to make our water supply clean and pure. They are purifying all inland streams to help keep the water pure.

Air will always be plentiful. Although the city air is always not the purest possible, our air supply will always be satisfactory.

It is the duty of each generation to improve this country and pass it on in better shape than they received it. Are we doing this? As Americans, let us do our part!

Petillo Rated Bright Hope in Classic Test

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind. — Kelly is hot this year!

That's the word that comes from the famous "ridge route" in sunny California that sets hearts in the Italian colony palpitating and means that Kelly Petillo, colorful little Italian who won the 1935 classic at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway is about ready to give a new motor a terrific beating in preparation for the annual 500-mile race on May 30.

"He drives his car at least 20 miles faster than it will run," the old timers say of Petillo who is the hardest, toughest driver to race at the famous Hoosier oval in many a day.

Asking no quarter and generally getting none, the cocky little Italian fills the stands when he is ready to qualify and is always considered "hot" and ready to win the big event.

He will arrive early with a new motor in his well-tried racing car.

News From Springfield

By Bernice T. Van der Vries
Representative, General Assembly
7th Senatorial District.

Get Real Work-Out

Committees in both houses of the General Assembly were reporting out bills in large numbers the past week. In the house where the appropriations committee had been given the right of way on Tuesday and Wednesday afternoons, many committees were forced to hold their hearings at night with the result that many members worked until midnight with only a recess for dinner. While many bills were reported out favorably by the various committees, many bills were sent to sub-committees. All through the session sub-committees have worked diligently upon bills and have often suggested amendments which have made the bills workable but at this stage of the Assembly, with only six weeks to go, a sub-committee is usually considered the burying place for a bill. Sponsors of bills usually plead with all their powers not to have the bills referred to such a committee. On many other bills the question of a quorum is being raised in order to prevent a bill from receiving favorable or unfavorable consideration.

The question of a quorum was raised in the Committee on Education Wednesday on the Teacher Tenure bill after the minimum wage bill was defeated in the committee. In the Committee on Municipalities the question of a quorum was raised by the writer on the Ryan bill which would force every municipal and school employee to reside in the municipality where they were employed.

Rush Appropriation Bills

All appropriation bills are being advanced on the calendar and the feeling is general that the Administration would like to hasten the close of the session by adjourning as soon as all administration appropriations have been passed by the two houses. In such a situation many bills harmful to business would die on the calendar but on the other hand there are many bills which are necessary for various districts and many welfare measures which would be of benefit to large numbers of citizens which would suffer the same fate.

The members of the Assembly listened with sympathetic ears to the Governor's message pleading for economy. The question could well be asked however "have all of the departments under his direction cut their appropriation requests to the limit?" Every member is aware of the fact that every department has an increase over two years ago. Another question is, "have no other groups a right to ask for state money?"

A compromise was reached on the School Budget Bills after several conferences Wednesday in which both sides of the question, the repealers and the amenders were represented. A new bill will be presented carrying the names of the sponsors of the two opposing bills Representatives Peters, Clabaugh, Noper and Van der Vries. In the new bills the school districts having boards of directors (the one room schools) will have the option of submitting to the tax commission but the budget submitted to the State Superintendent of Public Instruction in order to secure State Aid must be posted in conspicuous places in the district and there must be a hearing scheduled between the time of the posting and the adoption of the tax levy.

BE SURE TO VOTE THE

REPUBLICAN Party

STRAIGHT

AT THE JUDICIAL ELECTION ON MONDAY, JUNE 5

12th Judicial Circuit Record Strongly G.O.P.

See Return to G. O. P.

On the basis of state-wide elections the three counties have already returned to the Republican fold. For fifty years or more, the three counties turned in heavy G. O. P. majorities every two years with almost clock-like regularity. The only exception to this was 1912, when Iroquois and Will counties gave their pluralities to the Progressive Republican (Bull Moose) Theodore Roosevelt.

Not until 1930 did the counties switch to the Democratic side. That year they gave big margins to Democrat James Hamilton Lewis over Ruth Hanna McCormick. They stayed in the Democratic column thru the next three biennial elections, the margins narrowing in 1934 and 1936. But in last year's senatorial elections, they returned decisively to the Republican fold. Iroquois county favored Richard J. Lyons over Scott W. Lucas by more than 4 to 3, Kankakee by nearly that margin, and Will county by about 7 to 5.

Show Republican Trend

Judicial election results are not so revealing as presidential and state office returns, because Circuit judges are elected only every six years. But a study of the judicial ballot figures show much the same strong GOP tradition for the three counties of the 12th circuit.

The present boundaries of the 12th circuit were setup in 1897. Since that time the circuit has had twelve judges. Nine were Republicans or independents whose terms totaled 108 years. The three Democrats' terms totaled only 18 years.

Dorance Dibell of Joliet one of the first three judges elected in the present 12th, served the circuit for 25 consecutive years before his death. Robt. W. Hilscher of Watseka, another of the original three, died in office during his second term. John Small of Kankakee, the third judge, was succeeded in office by Charles D. Garney of Joliet, who also died in office.

Frank L. Hooper of Watseka, elected to succeed Judge Hilscher, served 24 years before he retired. Albert O. Marshall of Joliet, who was elected to the Garney vacancy, served only 4 years before the voters retired him in 1909.

De Selm Elected in 1914

Arthur W. De Selm of Kankakee was elected to the 12th circuit bench in a special referendum in 1914, to succeed Judge Chas. B. Campbell, who died five years after taking office.

Judges Dibell, De Selm and Hooper were reelected in 1915 and again in 1921. Judge Dibell died in office and in a special election in 1922, Frederick A. Hill of Joliet was chosen to succeed him. Judges Hooper, Hill and De Selm were reelected in 1927.

Judge Hooper retired in 1933, and Judges Hill and De Selm were defeated in the election that year. The winners that year, who ran as Democrats, were Judge Wilson of Joliet, Judge Claude N. Saum of Watseka and Judge William R. Hunter of Kankakee. Judge Hunter is nominally a Republican, but was named to a coalition Democratic slate.

Of recent years, as a rule, the party label has been kept off the 12th circuit ballot. Notable exceptions to this were the 1933 election, which saw 2 Republicans opposing three Democrats and that of 1909 in which there were 3 Republicans, three Socialists and one independent.

Shows Largest Field

Never before in the history of the circuit, however have there been 11 candidates in the field, as there are this year. The elections of 1897, 1903, 1915 and 1921 were uncontested. That of 1927 had 4 candidates, Judge De Selm, who had been nudged off the coalition slate, running successfully as an independent against John A. Mayhew of Kankakee, the man picked by the slate-makers to succeed him on the ticket.

There are 4 party columns on this year's judicial ballot in the 12th. Three of the candidates are listed as Democrats, 3 as Republicans, 3 as Nonpartisans and 2 on the People's Ticket.

Yugoslavia Is Europe's New Tinder Box; Minority Problem May Force Its Collapse

Repetition of Czech Coup
Seen for Dictators;
Italy's Turn Now.

By JULES DORMIER

Last year it was Czecho-Slovakia. This year it's Yugoslavia. The cast is different, the locale changed. But the drama is the same—a stubborn minority versus the strong central government. The background is also similar—an abortive nationalist history which got its start in the hasty halls of Versailles.

This is what happens when uninformed treaty makers disregard centuries of tradition, tossing cats and dogs in the same pen. Eventually the cats (or the dogs) subdue their enemies, who cringe vengefully in the corner awaiting the time to strike back. Now is the time.

Just as Sudeten Germans could legitimately complain that Czechs and Slovaks were purposely subduing them, so can Yugoslavia's Croats claim discrimination on the part of the more powerful Serbs who run the Belgrade government. It grows from centuries of dislike, aided by the fact that Croats are traditionally Catholic and the Serbs are Greek Orthodox and Moslems. Croats consider Serbs uncultured barbarians.

Planned Federalist State.

But the pressure of war sometimes makes strange bedfellows. In 1917 the Croats—anticipating break-up of the Austro-Hungarian empire—joined the Slovenes and Serbs in formation of a new state in which all three groups were to have equal constituent rights. The capital, unfortunately for the Croats, was placed at Serbian Belgrade.

Any Croat, like Dr. Vladimir Matchek, the groups "Gandhi," will readily outline the succeeding 20 years' grievances.

Yugoslavia's army has 202 generals, only two of whom are Croats, though there are about 6,000,000 Croats and 9,000,000 Serbs in the nation. Croats have no hand in running the state and they say—are regarded by Belgrade as good for only one thing: paying taxes.

Last December came the crowning blow. At the regular election Dr. Matchek's forces won at least 90 per cent of all votes cast by Croats, but were not given seats because Yugoslav election laws—allegedly "framed" by Belgrade politicians—provide that the party winning a bare majority automatically gets two-thirds of the seats in parliament.

Feeling that his regularly elected deputies have a right to speak for the people, Dr. Matchek founded an extra-legal Croatian national assembly which sits at Zagreb and refuses to recognize the present Yugoslav government.

Unsigned Settlement.

A settlement was almost reached April 27 when Dr. Matchek claims he signed an agreement with Premier Dragisa Cvetkovitch under which Yugoslavia would be divided into three autonomous provinces as shown on the accompanying map. Dalmatians and Croats would form one group, Slovenes a second, and the rest of the nation a third state in which would dwell a confusion of Moslems, Serbs, Montenegrins, Albanians, Bulgarians and Rumanians.

SIGNS OF TIMES

1. 'Luxury' Goods on Upswing
2. 'Good' Music Is Coming Back

MINNEAPOLIS.—Pianos, phonographs and records have renewed the sensational comeback which they began in 1934 and 1935, with the American public "going in" for good music and higher priced records; sales are running 20 to 40 per cent ahead of last spring and are close to 1937 levels, according to a quarterly study of demand for luxury and semi-luxury goods by Northwestern National Life Insurance company.

The public are also buying more luggage, furniture, furs and costume jewelry than this time last year, the company figures for 236 department stores show. Also men's clothing, which usually leads the trend of department store sales, made its best comparative showing in March, with sales 10 per cent over March of a year ago.

Sporting goods sales still lag behind the spring of 1938, but are gaining. Favorable golfing weather is having its effect, and the centennial of baseball's beginnings has resulted in gains exceeding 25 per cent in that field.

Classics Revived.

Dollar sales of phonographs and records for March climbed to within 2 per cent of March, 1937, and exceeded March, 1938, by 40 per cent. With the sales tempo speeding up in April, preliminary figures indicated that that month would exceed April, 1937, by a small margin. While the "swing" craze cuts a large figure in the revival, classical records are actually gaining faster just now than the popular selections. Stores report that "swing" addicts gradually begin to pick up a few better records, usually starting with modern classics.

Pianos Up, Too.

Piano shipments of 25,548 instruments in the first quarter of this year far exceeded the 19,911 total for the first quarter of 1938, and almost equalled the 1937 figure of 25,649 pianos shipped in the first three months of that year. Retailers reported a slight slowing of public demand in April, but May, with its music week, brought a rising volume. Due to the introduction of rapid style changes in pianos, dealers no longer carry heavy stocks, but buy very close to their current requirements, so that manufacturers' shipments closely follow the trend of actual retail sales, the study observes.

Though department store sales of luggage were down 1.4 per cent for the first quarter compared with a year ago, March was up 7.4 per cent over March of 1938. With a big travel year in prospect, under the stimulus of two world's fairs, stores expect fairly heavy sales in their luggage departments from now on.

TROUBLE AREA—Map shows Yugoslavia, with minority groups which might be "liberated" by Greece, Bulgaria, Rumania and Hungary in case internal revolt developed from the Croatian issue. Boundaries of the proposed autonomous states for Slovenes, Croats and Serbs are shown by broken lines.

This plan for a strong federated state might have saved Yugoslavia but Prince Paul, senior regent until 15-year-old King Peter comes of age, is said to have rejected it. Later, newspaper correspondents were shown the official draft of the agreement and found it carried no signatures. Now the Zagreb assembly has voted Dr. Matchek dictatorial powers, ordering him to keep the existence and liberty of a Croatian nation above all other considerations.

Stage Is Set for Italy.

This is the typical powder-keg situation which aggressive Germany and Italy love to "solve" by sending in troops to "keep peace." If the march does come, it will probably be from Italy, for the Rome-Berlin axis has apparently granted Mussolini a carte blanche in the Adriatic area in exchange for help in stripping Poland of Danzig and the Polish corridor. It will further be Italy's province because Rome does not dare allow Germany—good friend though she is—to push southward into the Italian sphere of influence. Capture of Yugoslavia would give Germany an outlet to the Mediterranean sea, and this Italy cannot afford.

The time may soon come when Prince Paul is unable to take care of himself, and Italy is carefully planning toward that day. Rome has sponsored an Italian-Yugoslavian friendship treaty under which Mussolini's soldiers would probably come to Prince Paul's "defense" in the event of a Croat uprising. Italy, and Germany, have engineered a treaty of friendship and non-aggression between Hungary and Yugoslavia, thereby defining the Hungarian-Yugoslav boundary as the dividing line between German and Italian influence.

Croats Dislike Fascists.

The Croats want no truck with dictators; a few months ago they looked favorably on Germany and thought of inviting Der Fuehrer to "liberate" them. Subsequent news of developments in Austria and Czecho-Slovakia has changed their minds but they probably realize that the price they pay for independence from the Serb yoke may be dependence on Italy.

It is recalled that when Germany seized Czecho-Slovakia all her neighbors rushed in to get their share of the spoils. Since Yugoslavia's story parallels Czecho-Slovakia's thus far, its coming history might be written in advance this way:

A Croat uprising could get so bad that Prince Paul would invite Mussolini's aid, immediately available from the "colony" of Albania. At a moment's notice Greece would invade to recapture her Macedonians, Bulgaria to free her nationals, Rumania to get hers, and Hungary to liberate the Germans and Magyars placed under Yugoslavia's care by the Versailles treaty. In such a situation the highly anti-Fascist Croats would probably appeal to France and Britain, thus endangering European peace once more.

It is significant that the rulers of Europe invariably play their diplomatic games on other fronts, yet go back to the Balkans when it comes time to start a war. Twenty-five years ago this June Archduke Franz Ferdinand and his wife were assassinated at Sarajevo, Serbia, (now Yugoslavia) and the World war resulted.

Today Yugoslavia's neutral independence is one of the greatest safeguards to European peace. Strategically placed, she separates ambitious Germany from such easy marks as Bulgaria and Greece. She keeps both Italy and Germany from locking horns with Rumania and blocks any expansionist ambitions Hungary may entertain.

But will Yugoslavia, a "war baby" like Czecho-Slovakia, explode from internal pressure and again endanger European peace? It may happen during the next few weeks or months; keep a weather eye on the Balkans.

New Dealers disappointed in Representative Smith's debating abilities . . . Democratic politicians erred in appraising Taft as weak speaker . . . Hurried recalculations in order for Republican leaders.

WASHINGTON.—New Dealers are tremendously disappointed in the popular reaction to the debates between Senator Robert A. Taft and Representative T. V. Smith of Illinois, as shown by recent polls. In the first place Smith is a prime favorite with the New Deal. It was common gossip that the New Dealers wanted Governor Henry Horner of Illinois to appoint Mr. Smith to the senate vacancy caused by the death of J. Hamilton Lewis, though the governor didn't oblige.

Whereas Senator Taft is simply anathema to the New Deal. He is stoutly expressing views which seem to the administration a turning back to the Grand Old Party in the days of Boise Penrose and Reed Smoot.

But there is another angle. After the Gridiron dinner, followed by the editors' convention here, most observers in Washington had virtually wiped Senator Taft off the slate of Republican possibilities for the presidential nomination next year.

ROBERT A. TAFT

This was manna from heaven for the New Dealers. They do not want the Republican candidate to be hitting from the shoulder next year. They want a Republican nominee who will be a pussyfoot on most of the "reforms," one who will give a great deal of credit for accomplishments to the Roosevelt administration, and thus narrow the area of the campaign debate to a very narrow field.

In appraising Taft as a weak speaker, however, they are now afraid they were counting their chickens prematurely. Taft is certainly not in Dewey's class as a speaker, but apparently he puts his points over on the radio. Worse, from the New Deal standpoint, he wins a 66 to 34 per cent division of listeners polled on his long series of debates with Representative Smith.

Believed Taft Too Reactionary.

This has caused some hurried recalculations on the part of Republican leaders too. Many of them had been saying, especially after the Taft fiasco—as most of them regarded it, in his speeches before the Gridiron diners and before the editors—that Taft was too much of a reactionary—that he opposed too many of the things the New Deal had done—that the people would never follow him.

To appreciate this, it must be remembered that the Republican leader of the senate is Charles L. McNary of Oregon. Now McNary is one of the shrewdest politicians in the business, but he certainly has never been numbered among the devastating critics of the New Deal.

In his own political career McNary has been so successful, as contrasted with such a hard hitter as L. J. Dickinson, of Iowa, for example, that there is quite a cult among the Republicans in favor of pussyfooting.

Hence the importance of this surprising showing that Taft has made as a result of his debates with Smith.

New Deal Earns Thanks Of Canned Milk Industry

In almost every city and town of the country, statistics show, the amount of canned milk has increased by leaps and bounds in the last few years, while the sales of fresh milk have declined. More and more families are finding that their household budgets are balanced more easily by using canned milk instead of paying present prices for fresh milk.

Without in the slightest degree intending any such thing, the New Deal in general, and the milk agreements in particular, have earned the gratitude of the canned milk industry by so increasing the spread in cost between fresh milk and canned milk that they have overcome the preference for fresh milk in hundreds of thousands of homes.

Back in the early days of the fumbling attempts of AAA to regulate the milk industry, a substantial start toward this consummation—although it was never an objective—was made. At that time the Triple A frowned on chain stores cutting prices on milk and cream. The Triple A didn't like anything about the system which made this cutting possible.

When Triple A clamped down on the New England chain stores for cutting cream prices, the sales went down in terms of thousands of gallons. Which resulted, of course, in the co-operatives having to make a great deal more butter, which, in turn, complicated the butter surplus problem. Mind you, the chain stores were commanded to charge higher prices for this cream—to make bigger profits on the amount handled than they wanted to.

Turnover Profits.

This is not a defense of the morals of the chain store operators. No one thought anything else than that the operators thought they would make more money by selling a lot of cream at a smaller profit. And they were right. Presumably the AAA executives thought that if the chain stores stopped cutting cream prices, the concerns delivering fresh milk and cream would get more business. Maybe the Triple A executives even thought eventually they could reduce cream prices to everybody.

But that was not what happened. When the price was put up in the chain stores, people stopped buying so much. In fact chain store sales of cream approached the vanishing point, while sales of cream by the delivery companies remained precisely as they were.

There was no attack on the delivery price of cream as being unreasonable. The profit was not exorbitant. But the chain stores were able to sell more cheaply because they had no delivery expense, and no loss on bad debts.

Result: Poorer people, to whom a few cents on a bottle of cream is important, turned to canned milk, not because they wanted to, but because it was that or no cream at all.

Tax Changes Await End of Waiting Game

Tax changes to aid business recovery are long on lip service and short on action, with President Roosevelt, the treasury and congress all playing a waiting game. Congress is willing to act, but is not willing to stick its neck out. The treasury is eager to act but its first real move toward action—an inspired story given to the Associated Press outlining four important proposals—is promptly brushed aside by the President as referring to mere "estimates" supplied on request from congressmen. The President sticks to his announced plan: Congress can do anything it wants to do to encourage business in the way of tax revision but the estimated cash returns to the treasury from business must not be reduced.

The President leaves it to congress to take the initiative but doesn't like any setup for tax revision that he has seen.

The treasury knows just what it wants and finds itself in rather surprising agreement with the conservative Democrats on Capitol Hill, headed by Pat Harrison, chairman of the senate finance committee, and Robert L. Doughton, chairman of the house ways and means committee. Most important of the treasury's proposals are:

Elimination of present undistributed profits, capital stock and excess profits taxes. Substitution of a flat rate corporation income levy of not more than 22 per cent, with special treatment for incomes under $25,000.

Higher-Bracket Tax Reduction.

Reduction in higher-bracket personal income taxes from a maximum of 75 per cent to a maximum of 60 per cent. (Actually, treasury experts have believed for several administrations that 50 per cent provides the maximum revenue.)

Authorization for corporations to carry over tax credits for losses for three years instead of one.

Modification of the capital gains tax to encourage investment.

Under Secretary John W. Hanes, leading agitator for tax revision as a business aid, now has 100 items in his "little black book," from which he quotes freely to legislators and officials.

But nothing the treasury says or thinks is "official" until the President approves. If the house ways and means committee should summon Hanes he would say just what he thinks. If it summoned Secretary Henry Morgenthau Jr. he would stutter unhappily unless he had the "Go" sign from the White House.

Meanwhile plenty of conservative Democrats on Capitol Hill are taking private satisfaction in evidence that the President will not support action. The result, they think, will be the nomination of a conservative by the Democratic convention next year. By the same token Republican leaders on Capitol Hill are placing the responsibility squarely on the Democrats, figuring that if no action comes a G. O. P. President next time is a cinch.

Modern life with its hurry and worry, irregular habits, improper eating and drinking—its risk of exposure and infection—throws heavy strain on the work of the kidneys. They are apt to become over-taxed and fail to filter excess acid and other impurities from the life-giving blood.
You may suffer nagging backache, headache, dizziness, getting up nights, leg pains, swelling—feeling constantly tired, nervous, all worn out. Other signs of kidney or bladder disorder may be burning, scanty or too frequent urination.

Six Countries Eye Antarctica

Germany Is Latest to Claim Part of Ice-Covered Continent.

WASHINGTON. — With Germany now making claim to 230,000 square miles of Antarctica, five nations and Australia have set up claims for the division of the vast continent that lies under a thick layer of ice at the "bottom" of the world.

"The claims on behalf of Norway, Great Britain, France, the United States, and Australia have sliced the Antarctic continent like a huge pie; but title to some of the slices is by no means clear and uncontested," says the National Geographic society.

How Claims Rest.

"When Amundsen, first man to reach the South pole, arrived there in December, 1911, he claimed for Norway a relatively small circular area of land around the pole with a radius of about 110 miles. Since then explorers who have cruised the Antarctic coast, penetrated the continent a few miles, or flown over certain previously unexplored regions have claimed for their countries all the land between certain longitudes extending all the way to the poles.

"The so-called Australian claim is the largest single slice of the Antarctic 'pie'. It extends from 45 degrees east longitude to 160 degrees east longitude. France, however, insists that the region from Adeline Land between 136 and 143 degrees east longitude, wholly within the Australian claim, is hers; and in January Lincoln Ellsworth looked down from an airplane in the same Australian area on 80,000 square miles 'never before seen by man,' and announced his claim for the United States. The Ellsworth area lies between 74 and 85 degrees east longitude, and 70 and 75 degrees south latitude. Thus, it does not reach the edge of the continent.

Claimed for U. S.

"Besides the Australian claims there are two other pie-shaped slices claimed by Great Britain: the Ross Dependency between 160 degrees east and 150 degrees west longitude; and a large area between 20 and 80 degrees west longitude. Between these slices claimed by Great Britain are Marie Byrd Land between 120 and 150 degrees west longitude, which was explored by Admiral Richard E. Byrd; and James W. Ellsworth Land, the area from 80 to 120 degrees west longitude which Lincoln Ellsworth claimed for the United States when he traversed the region by airplane in 1935.

"The Norwegian claims are not as definite as some of the others, but are understood to cover the sector extending from 20 degrees west longitude to 45 degrees east longitude. It is inside this latter sector that the new German claim has been set up."

'Napoleon' Brings Peace

To French and Italians

WARSAW, POLAND.—Warsaw's newest movie palace has opened as the "Cinema Napoleon" and not the "Paris Cinema," the name chosen originally.

The theater is in a building owned by an Italian insurance company and was leased by a French-Polish concern, which chose the name "Paris Cinema." The Italians objected to a French name. A compromise was effected on "Cinema Napoleon." The French are pleased because Napoleon was French and the Italians because "Napoleon was Italian anyway because he was a Corsican and Italy will get Corsica back some day."

Pheasants Seem to Know

All About Their Rights

GILROY, CALIF.—Golden pheasants, rigidly protected under California game laws, cause considerable embarrassment to a municipality when they calmly walked up the main street.

Two have done so here recently. The last one, caught by three small boys, was gracefully turned over to Judge Leon Thomas. He could find no legal precedents for such a case, but called in a game warden, instructed him to take the bird outside the city limits and give it a good start for somewhere else.

Buck Scorns Wild Life

After Tasting Comforts

SEQUOIA NATIONAL PARK, CALIF.—If the public doesn't quit feeding wild animals, there soon won't be any more wild animals—they'll be tame—park officials here think. A fine three-point buck which used to come to Lon Oldham's blacksmith shop for a daily handout was removed from the park last spring.

The buck, however, apparently had lost its hankering for the wild life and six months later showed up again at the blacksmith shop for its daily manna.

Switzerland Eyes Its Border, Protecting Age-Old Freedom

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

BEHIND Swiss border troops, which recently mobilized for possible emergency, is one of the world's oldest republics. In 1291, the first three of Switzerland's cantons (or states) joined in a defensive league against the house of Hapsburg. "In view of the malice of the time," they swore to have no ruler other than their own and to maintain their independence by their own armed strength. Later other provinces were added, until today the nation is made up of 22 largely autonomous cantons.

Of Switzerland's population, amounting to something over four millions, more than 70 per cent speak German, about 22 per cent speak French, and the rest Italian and other tongues. The official languages are these three, plus Romansch, a Latin derivative added last year as a fourth.

State Small but Important.

Surrounded by Germany, former Austria, France, Italy, and the little principality of Liechtenstein, Switzerland has a geographic position that is at once an asset and a liability. Traditionally a buffer state, she is also an important trade link between powerful neighbors. Though she has no seaboard of her own (either to defend or to use), she controls mountain passes over which rides the commerce of some of the most populous regions of south and central Europe. Nearly half of her domestic imports in 1938 came from neighboring countries; some 34 per cent of her exports were sold in near-by markets.

A mountainous country, with much unproductive land and few natural resources, Switzerland imports quantities of food as well as raw materials that keep her factories humming. With a rather dense population in an area less than half the size of Indiana, she has become a highly industrialized nation. Only about one quarter of her working people are engaged in agriculture. Another 6 to 8 per cent are occupied in the tourist business; while between 45 and 50 per cent are employed by industries, many of which had their early beginnings in handicrafts carried on at home during the long, winter evenings.

Make 'Quality' Products.

Because of domestic lack of raw materials and fuel, and the high cost of transport, Switzerland has specialized in quality products. Such articles as Swiss watches, chocolate, cheese, embroideries, and toys are known around the world. For in addition to Europe, Switzerland has valuable commercial relations with the United States, South America, and the Far East.

Germany continues to hold the No. 1 position in Swiss trade, both as customer and vender, although in 1938 purchases of German goods declined considerably. Soviet Russia was the only important trader who sold more to Switzerland last year than during 1937.

With a high average income and standard of living, Switzerland is one of Europe's richest countries. Her gold reserve is estimated at about $675,000,000.

Millions for Defense.

From now on, however, much more of the national income will be diverted to military preparedness, according to recent news dispatches from the Swiss capital. One report sets proposed expenditures for defense and public works at more than $240,000,000.

Perpetual neutrality was guaranteed Switzerland in 1815 at the Congress of Vienna by Prussia, Austria, France, Great Britain, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, and Russia; but the Swiss army was maintained on a war basis all during the World war.

For defense Switzerland has relied for centuries on a national militia, based on compulsory universal service. It has been estimated that Switzerland today could raise an army of nearly 300,000 men between the ages of 20 and 48.

Patagonia, Argentine Territory, Named 'Land of the Big Feet'

Patagonia—a little-known region with a familiar name—came into the international picture recently, as Argentina reported the investigation of an alleged German plot to annex this South American territory.

Long contested between Chile and Argentina, the so-called Patagonian area, constituting the tail of the continent, was finally divided between the two countries in 1881, its permanent boundaries set in 1902. The Argentine section, lying roughly east of the Andes and south of the great central plains, now includes the three continental territories of Rio Negro, Chubut, and Santa Cruz.

Name Means Big Feet.

Occupying some 259,000 square miles, or about one-quarter of all Argentina, this region is almost as large as Texas. Its name, translated "Land of the Big Feet," was first given it, according to some authorities, by early explorers, amazed at the size of footprints found there. Patagonia, as the home of a giant native race, however, has been considerably overrated, say modern explorers.

Rumania Is Younger

Than United States

Rumania, modern battleground of Old world tradesmen, is one of Europe's newer nations. Younger than the United States, having been formed in 1859 by the union of the two principalities of Walachia and Moldavia, Rumania gained more than half of her present area and population after the World war.

Roughly oval-shaped and about the size of Arizona, she is ringed about by six nations, stretching in counter-clockwise order from the Soviet Ukraine on the northeast to Poland, former Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Yugoslavia, and Bulgaria on the south. The eastern frontier faces the Black sea. Rumania has a population of more than 19,000,000 inhabitants, of whom about one-fourth are Hungarians, Germans, Russians, Turks, Bulgars, Gypsies, or Jews. Hungarians make up a large minority, with an estimated million and a half. There are some 750,000 Germans.

Absent Treatment

By GORDON EMSLIE
© Associated Newspapers,
WNU Service.

THE doctor had just gone and Peter Kane lay looking up at his nurse with an expression of intense exasperation, the immediate reason for his disgust being the decree that he could not hope to leave his bed for at least another week. Peter felt suspicious of that "at least." It smacked too much of the "on the point of death but must not be told" treatment. Not that he was possessed of any terrors, but he wanted tremendously to be up and about.

"Head ache?" asked his nurse kindly.

"No!" lied Peter crossly.

Something wet and deliciously cold descended on his hot forehead.

"There, that'll make your head feel better," murmured a soft voice. "I'll lower the shade so the light won't be too—"

"The light's all right," grumbled Peter, reaching for a book that was just beyond his grasp. Almost at once the book was miraculously in his hand, his pillows were plumped up, a glass of fresh ice-water was by his side and the nurse was unobtrusively seated by the farthest window. Still Peter felt disgruntled. His illness had reached that not-very-bad, rather-headachy, want-to-be-let-alone stage, when everything within sight and sound becomes at times intolerably irksome and nerve-wracking.

"Miss Rogers," said Peter finally, "you must be tired. Why don't you go and take your walk?"

"It will be time for your medicine shortly," was the reply.

"But, my dear girl," said Peter testily, "I still have the use of my hands, you know, even if that fussy doctor won't let me use my feet."

"You might forget to shake the bottle."

Peter raised himself a little in order to get a better view of her face. Her voice made him suspect that she was laughing at him. If such were the case he knew that a certain elusive dimple would make her well worth looking at.

"I'll promise to shake it."

"And then put the bottle back without opening," remarked Miss Constance Rogers sagely.

Peter considered the point.

"If I promise to shake the bottle and take a dose of that da—that extremely unpleasant stuff, will you go and take your daily constitutional immediately?"

"It's time for your medicine now," said Constance.

After the medicine there seemed to be all sorts of little things that needed attention; the window had to be raised, the shade lowered, the counterpane straightened. He fretted and fumed inwardly. How he hated to be fussed over as if he were an infant!

"I believe," proposed Peter hopefully, "that the best thing for me will be to be left alone in order that I may sleep."

Constance made no move to go. Obviously that had been an injudicious statement, decided Peter. Perhaps she thought it a subterfuge meant to cover a plan to disobey the doctor's orders and get up and dress.

"I think, after all, I'll read awhile," said Peter, sitting up and thumping his pillows truculently. "Just hand me that Cellini autobiography, please—the one on the table over there."

Constance brought him the book, plumped his pillows, raised the shade and started for her seat by the window.

"Now that you have done everything you can possibly think of, you may as well start, don't you think?" suggested Peter.

"I believe I shall," was the unexpected reply.

Five minutes after his nurse's departure Benvenuto Cellini's autobiography slipped to the floor, the cloth on his head felt so unbearably hot that Peter hurled it viciously over the footboard, the tassel on the shade tapped maddeningly against the window pane, the ice in his glass of water had melted; in short, he felt thoroughly miserable. By the time the clock had ticked away 30 minutes he felt abused; here he was lying helpless, neglected, in pain, for his head was pounding harder than ever. Nobody came in response to his bell—where on earth was June? Sisters never could be depended upon anyway. She'd probably run in next door for a minute—a minute that as usual meant a solid hour. It was Thursday, his mother's club day, he remembered; yes, and the maid's day off, too. No wonder his bell remained unanswered. A fine sister he had to desert him at a time like this! When 55 minutes had passed he was gloomily reflecting upon his fast approaching end.

Promptly on the hour Constance returned. When she laid a cool bunch of violets against his hot face she found her hands seized and held tightly.

"Connie," said Peter earnestly, "promise that you'll never leave me again as long as we live."

"Never?" asked Constance a little breathlessly, the dimple beginning to appear.

"Never!" said Peter emphatically.

What to Eat and Why

C. Houston Goudiss Describes the Role of Phosphorus In Nutrition; Tells Where to Obtain This Mineral

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

THERE are at least 11 different mineral salts which are essential to the structure or functioning of the human body. But of these, only four—calcium, phosphorus, iron and iodine—require the careful consideration of the homemaker. That is because a diet which furnishes adequate amounts of these four will automatically provide the others. But when the diet is deficient in any one of these four minerals, disastrous consequences may result.

It is therefore of the utmost importance that every homemaker should know something of their functions, and what foods supply them. In this article, we shall deal specifically with phosphorus.

Versatile Phosphorus

It has been said that if the biographies of the elements could be written, that of phosphorus would be the most interesting of all. That is because there are 14 different ways in which compounds of phosphorus may function in the body. In fact, it is doubtful if any other inorganic element enters into such a diversity of compounds or plays an important part in so many functions.

This mineral is indispensable for all the active tissues of the body and likewise helps in regulating the neutrality of the blood. It is found abundantly in nerve tissue.

Needed for Teeth and Bones

Its most significant role, however, is to team with calcium in giving rigidity to the bones and teeth. Approximately 90 per cent of the total phosphorus of the body and 99 per cent of the calcium are found in the bones and teeth.

Both these minerals are required in generous amounts, but almost twice as much phosphorus as calcium should be supplied every day. Moreover, children should have about one-and-one-half times as much phosphorus as adults, to meet the requirements for growth.

The muscles and soft tissues need phosphorus as well as the bones, and in the dietary of the child, they must share with the bones, the phosphorus that is provided by the food. Hence, the greater need for this mineral during childhood.

Phosphorus and Rickets

If a child's diet is deficient in phosphorus or calcium, or if conditions are not favorable for their proper absorption, rickets will occur. This devastating nutritional disease may result in deformities of the chest and pelvic bones, as well as the more familiar bow legs and knock-knees.

Investigators have spent many years in discovering how to prevent and cure this disease which has made life miserable for so many children and which has far-reaching effects that carry over into later life. For example, adults who have bow-legs or a pigeon breast as a result of childhood rickets, are always self-conscious because of their defects. And motherhood may be far more difficult.

HOW to SEW By RUTH WYETH SPEARS

"DEAR MRS. SPEARS: The curtains I made from your Book 1—SEWING, for the Home Decorator, are so smart and modern looking that they have given our living room an entirely new appearance. Right now I need an idea that will pep up my kitchen windows. Everything is up to date but the curtains. They look old fashioned. The color scheme is red and white, but please don't tell me to use red and white checked gingham because I have done that before.—J. B."

Alright, no checked gingham! How about some nice crisp dotted swiss with the widest red rick rack you can find for the edge? Then make a border around the top and sides of the window by pasting scalloped red oilcloth on the window frame, using wall paper paste. Cut the oilcloth in strips first, then mortise the corners by cutting them on the bias. Start marking the scallops at the corners, as shown here, making the center top scallop wider than the others. The tie-backs for the cur-cult for young women whose pelvic bones were deformed by rickets in their early years.

A Low-Phosphorus Diet

It was found that rickets may be associated with a low-phosphorus diet, even when the calcium content is high. And investigations also determined that there is a seasonal tide of blood phosphorus which corresponds to the amount of available sunlight. This led to the realization that sunlight—which we now know helps the body to manufacture vitamin D—is closely related to the proper utilization of phosphorus. And today it is well established that rickets can be prevented, or cured, by a diet containing liberal amounts of phosphorus, calcium and vitamin D. Vitamin D can be obtained from direct sunshine, but where this is not available in adequate amounts, cod-liver oil, irradiated foods, or those fortified with a vitamin D concentrate will supply this necessary substance.

Make Use of Sunlight

As we approach the season when the greatest amount of sunshine is available, homemakers should see to it that not only the children, but every member of the family spend as much time as possible in the sunlight. This will help to promote the proper utilization of phosphorus and calcium. And both teeth and bones will benefit, as well as the general health.

Where to Find Phosphorus

Every homemaker should acquaint herself with the foods that supply phosphorus most abundantly, so that she will be prepared to include this mineral in the diet every day. Egg yolk and dried beans are both valuable sources of phosphorus. So are whole grain cereals and lean meats. In fact, cereals and meats have this in common—both are rich in phosphorus and deficient in calcium. Whole grain breads are likewise important for their phosphorus content. And on a percentage basis, cheese ranks very high as a carrier of this mineral.

Cocoa also contains a large percentage, though it must be remembered that, as a rule, only small quantities of cocoa are consumed at one time. Many nuts, including almonds, peanuts, pecans and walnuts, furnish significant amounts. And this mineral is found in dried fruits such as raisins, figs and prunes, and in much smaller quantities in vegetables, such as spinach, cauliflower, string beans, carrots and Brussels sprouts.

Milk supplies phosphorus, though not in such generous amounts as calcium. However, if you follow the rule of a quart of milk daily for every child and a pint for each adult, you will contribute materially to the phosphorus and calcium content of the diet.

Honor Guard Keeps Watch Over Shrine

ONCE a year—on Memorial Day—eyes of the nation focus on a tomb in Arlington National Cemetery in Washington, D. C., on which is inscribed: "Here rests in honored glory an American soldier known but to God." That those soldiers who died in service of their country shall be constantly remembered, the United States Army maintains a perpetual vigil over the tomb of the Unknown Soldier.

1 On guard at all times is one soldier. The sentry detail includes three shifts of four men each. Each shift is on duty 12 hours, then is off duty 24. This sentry marches 30 paces a minute, keeps the post for two hours, then is relieved for four.

2 While waiting to go on duty, this private answers the questions of two sightseers. He and the 11 others of his detail will serve for 15 days, then be replaced by new sentries.

3 During bad weather guards use the sentry box instead of marching back and forth before the tomb. At all other times regulations provide that sentries shall stand guard outside.

4 Placing a floral wreath on the tomb is a time-honored gesture of reverence and commemoration. Each year, in this way, many visiting dignitaries pay their grateful respects to America's heroic Unknown Soldiers.
